CARE & MAINTENANCE:

To remove any surface residue that may occur dilute chlorine 10% : 90% water. A soft nylon brush is recommended. Once dried, rub thoroughly with a clean cloth. We recommend the use of a good quality furniture cover to protect your setting from UV/weather damage when not in use.

Teak: Is the premium, natural grown, extremely durable hardwood harvested from teak plantations that have been cultivated and replanted for hundreds of years. Teak has natural preservation properties of inherently occurring oil within the depths of teak itself, that repels termites and withstands the affects of the elements, protecting the rich honey and dark brown colours of the natural wood by delaying UV discolouration of surface wood grains which in time will fade to silver grey to black. Minor cracks or end grain cracking may occur during weathering without affecting the timber's structural integrity and after routine cleaning maintenance and re-oiling of the surface woodgrains, visual defects such as these can be eliminated.

Teak's inherent natural timber oils give its surfaces an attractive low gloss sheen natural finish. Under the manufacturing, finishing processes and day to day use, surfaces will retain fine teak surface dust which ultimately gather dirt grains. These may be cleaned away by rain or manually washed down with soapy water. Dirty surfaces if uncleaned, may cause discolouration or dirt stains to fabrics unless they are removed by manual washing with clean soapy water. The teak timber surfaces should be cleaned at least once a year with soapy water, using a soft bristled brush or a Scotch Brite pad to remove any dark dirt stains or dust contamination.

To preserve the honey brown colours of your teak furniture, we recommend you visit a marine paint store to purchase a specialty teak sealer (normally used on boats). These clear sealers are often epoxy resin based, of water-like viscosity to penetrate deep into the surface of the teak to protect the surfaces from the affects of 'weathering' caused by the sun's UV rays, mould and moisture. The teak sealer should be applied only to a scrupulously clean surfaces, generally every 6-12 months by hand-rubbing with a clean, sealer-dampened cloth.
